Being of the age 17, I still strongly agree with the driver's liscense system being changed to a graduated system. Although many teens do not like it, it is a better law. It allows you to pratice better and safer driving. It is not only a safer law for the driver, but for others on the road with the driver. It will help decrease the amount of car accidents that happen every day.

The learner's permit is a good way for new drivers to get experience while driving with adults. While driving with an adult the new driver can be corrected for their mistakes instead of not knowing what they did wrong and making more mistakes.

New drivers today get excited that they can drive and want to be on the road all the time and bring all their friends with them. That's the dangerous part. That is another reason I agree with the new law. Allowing teens only certain hours to drive is safer for them and others on the road. Also, it is a good idea to limit the number of people in the car so that the new, unexperienced driver will not endanger other lives.

decrease the number of deaths from car accidents. So many young teens are killed or injured because of unsafe driving. This new law will help teens to get more experience and become better drivers.

This is why I think the new law is a good idea. It will help new drivers become more experienced, safer to protect themselves and others riding with them, and to decrease the number of deaths caused from unsafe driving.
