G 21a

One day I was a raindrop in a storm. I was scared it might hurt when I fell. I was held in the back of the gigantic cloud. The other clouds were speeding ahead northeast. My cloud was last. And, as more evaporation was coming into the clouds rain drops started to fall lightly. Then it would stop until the cloud was full again. It would do that for a long time. Then the big rough and tough clouds rolled about. Their raindrops fell rapidly like it was never going to stop. Sometimes we would see people playing in the storm. Until lightning came from the sky and zapped them with a stinging touch of anger. The thunder rumbled like a wild indian beating very hard on his base drum. hearing one thunder-clap would make you quiver all over. I know it made the babies cry in their cribs inside their snug comfortable homes. It started to rain again now, we were headed south near Tennessee and Kentucky. Levys flooded roads were very wet cars would not start because they were to wet inside them. Suddenly, the tornado siren
