World War II Archaeology – Kwajalein

Kwajalein Atoll is part of the Marshall Islands in the south Pacific. At the beginning of World War II, Japan utilized this location as an outlying base for airplanes, submarines and warships as part of their perimeter of defense. U.S. forces attacked this position in January of 1944 and seized control after four days of fierce battle.

In the mid-1990s, Mr. Froeschauer was part of a group of archaeologists that surveyed and documented World War II structures and features on the Kwajalein Atoll. John will provide a slide accompanied lecture of these investigations at Kwajalein and Roi-Namur.
