I. INTRODUCTION

Tennessee has some of the best white-tailed deer (Odocoileus virginianus) hunting in the world. An estimated population of 600,000 white-tailed deer and lengthy deer hunting seasons result in great hunting. However, Tennessee has not always had abundant white-tailed deer populations. As late as the 1940's, the white-tailed deer herd was estimated at fewer than 1,000 animals (Nichols 1978). Fortunately, major restocking efforts from the 1930s through the 1980's have resulted in historic populations and outstanding hunting resident and nonresidents enjoy today. The annual white-tailed deer harvest in Tennessee now frequently exceeds 160,000 animals (Anderson et al., 2013).

Though early records are somewhat sketchy, elk (C. Canadensis) were apparently abundant in Tennessee prior to settlement by European explorers and colonists (Wathen et al., 1997). Other records indicate the last elk in Tennessee was killed in Obion County, Tennessee in 1865 (Murie 1951). Due to reintroduction efforts beginning in 2000, elk once again roam Tennessee and are of growing significance to our state. Elk hunting opportunities are limited with six permits issued annually, but hunting for these permit holders is usually great.

II. GENERAL PROGRAM HISTORY

White-tailed deer

Past troubles for white-tailed deer populations in Tennessee have been traced back as far as 1896 when Rhoads, an early scientific writer, reported they had been exterminated over the greater part of Tennessee (Schultz 1955). Declines in white-tailed deer populations in Tennessee continued with fewer than 1,000 animals being reported in the 1940's (Nichols 1978). Extensive habitat loss from agricultural clearing and heavy exploitation for hides and venison nearly resulted in white-tailed deer being extirpated from Tennessee. As evidenced by early hide export records, white-tailed deer were likely abundant prior to these events (Dickson 2001).

Beginning in the 1930's, several public agencies began white-tailed deer restoration efforts on a few public lands in Tennessee. The Game and Fish Division of the Tennessee Department of Conservation, United States Forest Service, Tennessee Valley Authority, and the United States Navy all restocked white-tailed deer at this time (TWRA Wildlife Research Report 91-1). The Tennessee Wildlife Resources Agency (TWRA), known then as the Tennessee Game and Fish Commission, began restocking public lands in 1949 and private lands in the mid-1950's. Nine thousand deer were released in Tennessee by these agencies from 1940-1985. White-tailed deer stockings included deer from Michigan, Maryland, Wisconsin, North Carolina, Virginia, and Texas. Once adequate populations of deer were built from these initial stockings, in-state deer became the primary source for later restocking efforts (TWRA Wildlife Research Report 91-1).

The first white-tailed deer hunting seasons, limited to public lands, were established in Tennessee in the 1940's. Private land deer hunting opportunities began in the 1950's (Nichols 1978). By 1990, there were no areas in the state closed to deer hunting (TWRA Wildlife Research Report 91-1).

TWRA's success in growing the white-tailed deer population and improving hunting has continued to this day. The white-tailed deer population is estimated at 600,000 animals and the annual harvest exceeds 160,000 animals. This is impressive considering less than 200 hundred deer were reported harvested in 1978 (Deer Operational Plan 1979).

Elk

The eastern subspecies of North American Elk was present throughout Tennessee before European settlement. In the 1800's, habitat destruction and overharvest led to the extirpation of this subspecies in Tennessee (O'gara and Dundas 2002). Accounts from early settlers indicate elk were found in Middle Tennessee as late as 1825. "In the mountains of the east and in the swamps of the western part of the state it held out a bit longer...", apparently the last one having been shot in 1865 (Ganier 1928).

As a result of successful elk reintroductions in other states, TWRA began planning in 1996 to reintroduce elk to Tennessee (Wathen et al., 1997). TWRA selected a 271,145 hectare elk restoration zone on the North Cumberland Wildlife Management Area (NCWMA), formally known as Royal Blue WMA, located in Anderson, Campbell, Claiborne, Morgan, and Scott counties (Figure 1). NCWMA was selected due to its close proximity to Kentucky's elk restoration zone, low human population, its potential elk hunting and viewing opportunities, and the near absence of nearby agricultural crops elk would damage (Wathen et al., 1997).

Initially, TWRA biologists believed NCWMA habitats would allow herd expansion up to 2,000 animals. As a result, plans called for a total of 400 elk to be released over four years beginning in 2000 (Wathen et al., 1997). Elk Island National Park (EINP) in Alberta, Canada was chosen as the source of elk due to its long history of disease-free animals. The first release of elk occurred on December 19, 2000 at Horsebone Ridge on NCWMA where 50 were released. In 2001 and 2002, an additional 36 and 50 elk were released near Puncheon Camp Creek. Unfortunately after 2002, elk from EINP were no longer available due to new restrictions on interstate movement of cervids because of Chronic Wasting Disease concerns. However in 2003, Land between the Lakes (LBL) National Recreation Area had 31 elk, originating from EINP, available for TWRA (Lupardus 2005). TWRA imported and released these elk, but was unable to obtain additional from LBL until 2008; when they obtained and released 34 more.

Although TWRA's original plans were to release 400 elk, only 201 have been reintroduced in Tennessee (Steve Bennett, personal communication, 2014). The inability to import elk from EINP, due to import restrictions, and LBL, due to a lack of surplus animals, has resulted in TWRA not having a source of elk. If situations change enabling EINP or LBL to once again become a source, TWRA will consider importing more elk into Tennessee.

Upon recommendations made by TWRA, the Tennessee Wildlife Resources Commission (TWRC) established the first Tennessee elk hunting season in 2009. The five day season began October 19th and ended October 23rd. Four fortunate hunters were randomly selected through a TWRA drawing and a fifth participant was the winner of an auction administered by a nongovernmental organization raising funds for TWRA's Elk Program. Based on the results of an additional drawing, hunters were assigned one of five elk hunting zones established on NCWMA (Figure 2). Every hunter successfully harvested a bull the first year and subsequent years have yielded similar impressive results as well (Table 1). In 2012, a youth elk permit was added by the TWRC; enabling a youth to hunt the entire NCWMA the weekend after the other elk hunt. The youth permit recipient is selected through a TWRA drawing as well. All permits have a bag limit of one antlered elk (Anderson et al., 2013).

III. 2013-2014 HARVEST

White-tailed deer

The statewide white-tailed deer harvest for 2013-2014 was 168,461 (Table 2). For the purposes of this report we present combined harvests of archery, muzzleloader, and gun hunters. There was a 5% decrease in harvest from 2012-2013, but the harvest is consistent with other recent annual totals. TWRA's Region II accounted for 35% of the statewide harvest. TWRA's Region I came in a close second, accounting for 32% of the overall harvest and Regions III and IV reported 17% and 13%, respectively. Only 3% of the harvest occurred on wildlife management areas (WMAs). However, harvests on wildlife management areas (WMAs) increased from 2012-2013 to 2013-2014 by approximately 5% (Table 2).

Hunter success and weapon type harvest data from the 2013-2014 white-tailed deer season was similar to recent years. Forty-five percent of Tennessee's estimated 200,000 hunters were successful in harvesting at least one deer (Table 3). Thirty-one percent of deer hunters harvested an antlered deer and 22% harvested antlerless deer. Eighty percent of the hunters who harvested deer killed less than three (Table 3). Gun hunters killed 65% of the harvested deer, and 24% were harvested by muzzleloader hunters. Archery hunters, including crossbow hunters, harvested 12% of the deer. Crossbow hunters only harvested 4% of the total kill while users of other archery equipment harvested 8%.

Giles County led the state in deer harvest with 5,419 (Table 4). Other top five counties included Lincoln, Fayette, Henry, and Hardeman Counties. Henry and Lincoln Counties led the state in the number of bucks killed with nine or more points (Table 5). In regards to WMAs, Land between the Lakes (LBL) WMA led the state in harvest and number of bucks with nine points or more taken (Table 6 and 7).

Biological data was collected by TWRA personnel from 3,356 white-tailed deer. Fifty-seven percent of antlered bucks harvested (2,192) were 2.5 years or older (Table 8 and Figure 3). This was a slight improvement over the 2012-2013 deer season (Figure 4). Age data from 1,438 deer harvested on WMAs revealed similar results. Fifty-nine percent of bucks from WMAs were 2.5 years or older, whereas 41% percent were 1.5 years old (Table 9 and Figure 5). For WMA specific harvest data search the Hunters Toolbox

The 2013-2014 white-tailed deer season was the first deer season since TWRA launched its mobile application for electronic tablets and smartphones. As a result, deer hunters are able to record their harvests with the State while afield. Hunters can also follow TWRA's latest news, access TWRA's hunting guide, purchase licenses, check sunrise and sunset times, locate WMAs and check stations, and upload pictures to their hunter diary using the mobile application. TWRA's mobile application functioned well for harvest reporting and does not seem to have affected reporting compliance as some had predicted. TWRA's mobile application has become the envy of other wildlife agencies.

Elk

The 2013 elk hunt took place October 21st through October 27th. Hunting on the first five days was limited to the four hunters drawn during the regular elk hunt drawing and another hunter who purchased the auction elk tag, whereas the final two days were limited to a youth hunter drawn during the youth drawing. All hunters, except the youth hunter, participated in an additional drawing to determine which elk hunting zone they would hunt (Figure 2). The youth was allowed to hunt all zones. Five elk were harvested by the six hunters for an overall success rate of 83%. Four bulls were harvested during the first five days and a spike was taken during the youth-only hunting days (Table 1).

IV. 2013 ELK POPULATION ESTIMATION

Elk population estimates are conducted annually using mark-resight surveys analyzed using the Bowden estimator in program NOREMARK. An aerial survey is conducted within one week of the mark-resight survey to determine the total number of elk with active collars on the study area. Elk with active radio collars are considered marked animals, whereas elk with inactive radio collars (i.e., not transmitting) are considered unmarked.

Ground survey periods begin in early November and extend into early December. Observations are conducted opportunistically by WMA staff and volunteers throughout the survey period. Additional systematic surveys are conducted during intensive periods (e.g., 2-3 days) with up to six vehicles being used to search for elk on or near NCWMA.

During the ground survey phase all elk observed are noted. If an elk is seen with a collar, a receiver is turned on to scan through all known elk frequencies. Collared elk with active radios are noted as marked animals, otherwise the elk are considered unmarked. No elk are located by following transmitter signals. When elk are sighted, the observer records group size, gender, age (calf or adult), and animal identification (radio frequency) if present (Anderson 2009).

Region IV staff and volunteers observed 207 elk during the 2013 survey period. Using the Bowden estimator for mark-resight data, we estimate an elk population of 240 animals (95% CI 114 - 511) in the Elk Restoration Zone (ERZ).

The estimated gross population growth rate* was 4 % higher than the 2012 estimate and shows consistent population growth from the restoration beginning. The 2013 population estimate falls within reasonable bounds of the exponential growth curve fitted to data collected on the North Cumberland elk herd (Figure 6). Figure 6 shows all the population data collected as well as the release numbers. The curve estimated with data collected on this herd appears to indicate the population has a positive growth trajectory. However, the magnitude of the trajectory (i.e., slope of these lines or growth rate) will be more difficult to assess using these methods. Thus, TWRA should continue data collection efforts in future years to better understand the true dynamics of the North Cumberland elk herd.

V. CHRONIC WASTING DISEASE (CWD) SURVEILLANCE

Even though CWD has never been detected in Tennessee, TWRA personnel have conducted CWD surveillance since 2002. Initially, TWRA personnel sampled over 1,000 white-tailed deer annually, but biologists realized their sampling efforts were insufficient to detect CWD in wild cervid populations. However, TWRA personnel have continued to test a minimum of 200 white-tailed deer per year. In regards to elk, CWD testing of hunter harvested elk has continued since the first elk hunting season in 2009. The continuation of TWRA's CWD sampling enables personnel to practice sampling and teach new personnel proper collection techniques. Additionally, sampling helps reinforce to the public the seriousness of CWD and the threat it poses to Tennessee's cervids.

TWRA personnel sampled 277 whitetails and five elk in 2013. All samples were submitted to the Southeastern Cooperative Wildlife Disease Study College of Veterinary Medicine for analysis and none tested positive for CWD.
