Hendersonville resident enlists in Tennessee Army National Guard

HENDERSONVILLE, Tenn. – Spc. Kevin Scarborough, a Hendersonville resident, recommitted to continuing his service by enlisting as a horizontal construction engineer in the Tennessee Army National Guard on Sept. 27.

Scarborough formerly served as a cargo specialist at Fort Eustis, Virginia, from 2016-2019 as an active-duty Soldier. As a cargo specialist, his duties included leading, directing, and performing duties for all modes of transportation. Now, as a Tennessee Guardsman, he will attend training at Fort Leonard Wood, Missouri, to become a horizontal construction engineer, where he plans to learn new skills and continue his military career.

Scarborough is now a member of the 212th Engineer Company, headquartered in Paris.

I am excited to attend horizontal construction engineer training in the near future,” said Scarborough. “I’ve had a few jobs but nothing gives me a sense of pride the way the military does.”

Scarborough spoke with other branches of the military before enlisting, and after conducting research on which was going to provide him with the best benefits, he decided on the National Guard.

“I have been thinking about re-enlisting for quite a while and it feels great to be back in service again,” said Scarborough.

Scarborough plans to utilize the education benefits offered by the Guard, such as the Tennessee STRONG Act to have 100% of his in-state tuition paid for when he returns to school, in pursuit of an engineering degree.
